No, that's not a typo. The Ubuntu Linux community has officially installed a Linux-based operating system on the International Space Station (ISS). This page was originally posted on our sister site The Tech Blog on November 30, 2012. We came across it after doing some research about what's going on with the space station. If the new OS is working out, we're all for it. However, if it's not, we'll probably hear about it. It will be interesting to see if the Linux community can come up with something that they have yet to, only to later find it was more complex than they thought. Greetings. I'm new to the forum, and I really like to give everything a chance. Can anyone give me their opinion of this? For those of you that don't know me, I'm the creator and f'n main developer of Canonical Live USB. Its a very simple utility to create Ubuntu (Xubuntu, Mint) CDs/DVDs with the least amount of fuss possible. What I'm asking for: Is this a good idea? Can I do this? How do I do this? And/Or is there anything else out there that I should know about, you may have heard of? Thank you very much For the most part, windows' "Start Menu" is a blatant copy of Mac OS X's "Applications" folder. This was done simply to make Windows look more like it's Mac cousin. Unfortunately

What's New in the Awake?

Awake! is a free utility that prevents the display of your computer from turning off or locking. It does not modify any of your system settings. In addition, it turns off the display whenever you use the lock screen function (Win+L). Awake is a very simple app (it may look a bit ugly) and it uses the UserModel system service, so it will run even when your computer is turned off. "I've used this app for years to turn off my system when I leave the office." - Ward Pickard "I used this program to avoid my work laptop from hibernating - it's saved me an awful lot of time and frustration!" - James Van Bibber "This is my go to app to keep my computer and all my programs running. The script works flawless and is very easy to use." - JL To start: Run the Awake.exe application, press the "Stop" button in the tray or right-click anywhere in your system tray and then select "Open Daemon Manager". On the next screen, click on the "Add" button and type "Awake.exe", then select "Ok". You can also select "Ok" on the "Select an option" and "Cancel" buttons. When the process is successfully registered, a dialog box will appear with the "Awake!" name and a tray icon. The icon is a clock with the 'D' (daemon) symbol. Remove Awake: Select "Settings" from the "Add" menu, then "Remove" from the "To customize" menu. You will be asked if you want to stop the daemon and everything it does. Press "Ok" and the daemon will stop. Important Use a fully unpatched version of Windows. Some (older) versions of Windows lack proper support for screensaver or other screens off events. If your computer has not been patched, then it may shut down automatically without you consenting to it. Enable automatic updates Whenever possible, update your system to the latest version of Windows. This may help avoid these issues. If possible, disable autostart for your application. If you use Awake! it's enabled. You can run it as a service to set it as a "always on" service or set it to start automatically. I have had Awake working for weeks on my Windows 8 laptop and desktop by setting the idle time to when
